

Ko Mishima is adjunct professor of political science at Towson University in Baltimore, Maryland. He holds an MPA from Harvard University and a Ph.D. in international relations from the Johns Hopkins University.

1. The other candidates were Taro Aso and Sadakazu Tanigaki. Conventionally, the voters of the LDP's presidential election are its parliamentarians and representatives of its prefectural branches.
2. Such advisors include Jun Shiozaki (Chief Cabinet Secretary), Yuriko Koike (Special Advisor for Security), Takumi Nemoto (Special Advisor for Economics), Eriko Yamatani (Special Advisor for Educational Reform), Hakubun Shimomura (Deputy Chief Cabinet Secretary), Shoichi Nakagawa (Chairman of LDP's Policy Research Council), and Nobuteru Ishihara (LDP's Deputy Secretary-general).
3. This name was given because it showed little interest in student movement unlike the preceding baby-boomer generation.
4. The number of factions remained five through the 1980s. But several factions split in the 1990s, so their number today is nine.